G31000 Risk Management Group -- Total Fraud? Manager's Choice

Christopher Paris

It seems the G31000 Global Institute for Risk Management Standards, and organizer of the International ISO 31000 Conference, is a scam, operated by a charlatan.

Prompted by the discovery that G31000's President Alex Dali is using a fake LinkedIn profile (featuring the photo of an eyebrow model) to promote his LinkedIn page, I began investigating. It seems that on two occasions, Mr. Dali openly plagiarized works and then took credit for them as his own publications on risk management, in one case, he copied the entire article, and just put his name on it. All attempts to verify his credentials in risk management have come up empty, and he has refused to confirm any of his claims. He claims he is an "invited professor" for a number of universities, but will not reveal which, and one university I contacted said that he has never taught anything there.

For the full pattern of deception, see this, which includes examples of his plagiarism:

<http://www.oxbridge.com/emmal/?p=2668>

and this on the fake LinkedIn profile he is using:

<http://www.oxbridge.com/emmal/?p=2628>

I also am beginning to talk with some individuals who have knowledge of the development of the G31000 "certified risk manager" courses, and discovering that the material itself may not even comply with ISO 31000, and therefore the certifications are suspect. G31000 is not accredited to ISO 17021, so the training classes are unaccredited, attendees do not even need to take an exam, if they choose not to.

I would post this in his risk management group, but he has added me to the list of people he censors.

It is important that ISO 9001 practitioners do thorough research on providers of any risk management certifications, or conferences, before spending any money. We are entering a period where any idiot will claim to be a "risk management expert" just because of ISO 9001 2015 and ISO 31000.

Caution, everyone.

I am not a G31000 trainer or an expert on any subject for that matter. After reading the Oxbridge articles I chuckled some in realizing that I have talked with Alex on occasion and have even contributed in G31000 discussions. That said, I do not presume to know much else.

I would however like to take this opportunity to announcing my upcoming training and certification programs in preparation for ISO 9001:2015 entitled:

Deeper and deeper. Alex Dali claims he is Managing Partner at Formascope. The founder and president of Formascope just wrote me to tell me he has never heard of Alex Dali, and that he has never worked for the company.

A charlatan is one who pretends to possess knowledge he or she lacks. From the 16th century Italian charlatano "a quack," the usage of charlatan has not shifted much. Other words for charlatan are impostor, cheat, or pretender. Charlatans are marked by the elaborate schemes they cook up. Russian playwright Anton Chekhov said, "No psychologist should pretend to understand what he does not understand...Only fools and charlatans know everything and understand nothing."

Chris, it's that what you show us? The Emperor without clothes? How about the Empress?

Hans, you received that from the G31000 group?

I had joined that group on invitation of Alex Dali not knowing him. Soon I find ISO 31000 is what Alex Dali is fixated on & thinks of himself as THE expert on the subject. So, I was the one who left the group which I find out could not possibly add any value to anybody. The thing that surprises me is why so many members do not leave that group sooner rather than later? He is taking credit for the sheer number of people he has been able to attract to his group, & frankly I don't see why innocent people should go on contributing to the obvious charlatanism.

Yes Chris, I received that message from G31000 right after posting a critical comment with a link to your specific Oxebridge site. As a consequence and punishment they also kicked me out of the group by now :)

Maybe Alex Dali inherited genes from Salvador Dali the well known surrealist painter, who was also a showman, but at least his paintings were not fakes!
